ESGE Days 2018

April 19–21, 2018
Budapest, Hungary

Registration is now open!

ESGE is very happy to announce that the wait is over as online registration for this brand new and exciting “ESGE Days 2018” congress is now open.

When registering online, delegates will also have the opportunity to sign-up for the social programs and pre-register for the hands-on endoscopy training sessions. Participant numbers for some sessions are limited, so register now to avoid disappointment.

ESGE members get the best registration rates for this event, so if you have not already become an ESGE Individual Member, now is the ideal time to join us. To find out more about how to become an ESGE member, visit www.esge.com.

QinE IBD & Nutrition Symposium report

The 9th edition of the Quality of Endoscopy Symposia series was very well received. 140 participants from 30 countries joined the faculty to discuss and debate current and future themes related to the field of IBD & Nutrition.

The Academic Skills Course was also a great success with participants benefiting from intensive expert teaching in a small group setting. Participants were given insights into themes such as how to start clinical research projects and preparation of manuscripts.

Communication is a very important component of the day to day life of a doctor. This skill was also covered in depth during the Academic Skills Course, during which participants were provided helpful guidance about how to maximize the effectiveness of communication in a variety of clinical settings.

The hands-on endoscopy training session on Sunday morning continues to be a very popular aspect of the QinE events and again proved to be a resounding success. Participants could choose to participate in biological model training or video capsule endoscopy training. Both courses provided participants the opportunity to put what they had learned during the symposium into practice.

ESGE Guidelines

“Role of Endoscopy in Primary Sclerosing Cholangitis”: European Society of Gastrointestinal Endoscopy (ESGE) and European Association for the Study of the Liver (EASL) Clinical Guideline from Aabakken et al. Please read page 588–608 in this issue of Endoscopy.

Clinical guidelines are important, but sometimes topics that bridge different specialties are more challenging to compile. Therefore, it is especially gratifying that the EASL and ESGE societies have joined forces to create these important guidelines on a difficult clinical topic.

Prof. Tom H Karlsen, Oslo, Norway, incoming Secretary General of EASL, together with Prof. Lars Aabakken, past president of ESGE, chaired a joint committee of highly select experts from the two societies to prepare a number of qualified statements, in close collaboration with the ESGE guideline committee and corresponding EASL bodies. The guidelines are co-published in Endoscopy and the Journal of Hepatology, and will be of practical help for hepatologists and endoscopists alike in defining the optimal use of endoscopy in the handling of this complex group of patients.

Despite the predominant diagnostic role of MRCP, ERCP remains crucial for diagnostic sampling for dysplasia or cholangiocarcinoma, as well as for treatment of dominant biliary strictures. Moreover, endoscopic surveillance of PSC-associated colitis is reviewed and highlighted.
